Meeting the challenges of Agriculture and Forestry with Commissioner Bob Odom

In a light turnout, cotton farmers in northwest Louisiana overwhelmingly approved a program to continue monitoring their cotton during the next five years to ensure that the boll weevil has been permanently eliminated from their fields, said Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom.

With 556 of 1,579 eligible cotton farmers voting, 534, or 96 percent, voted for the boll weevil eradication maintenance program.

With the success of the five-year eradication program in the 17-parish area along the Red River from the Arkansas line to south of Alexandria, farmers are planning a big jump in acreage planted to cotton this year, Odom said.

"The initial five-year program in the northwestern parishes ended in 2000. It has effectively eliminated the most troublesome insect in cotton, cut farmers' chemical input costs by some 70 percent and given them one crop that they can expect to see a profit from in the coming year," Odom said.

In recent surveys, farmers in the area have indicated they will increase acreage from about 90,000 last year to 130,000 for the 2001 crop season.

"The maintenance program is to implement trapping and monitoring around fields to ensure the boll weevil does not return to the Red River area. Traps will be set around fields and checked on a scheduled basis. If isolated weevils are found, insecticide applications will be made," Odom said.

The cost to farmers for the maintenance program will depend on costs incurred. They voted to spend up to $10 per acre. Estimates from similar programs in other states are that the average cost will be about $7 per acre per year.

During the initial five-year program when insecticide applications were made throughout the season, the average cost was $30 per year per acre.

The Red River vote does not affect the boll weevil eradication work going on in northeast Louisiana, where the program is in the third year of its first five-year effort.

Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom welcomes guests to Louisiana Agriculture Day 2001. Ronnie Anderson, President of the Louisiana Farm Bureau Federation, looks on as the crowd learns about changes in the agriculture and forestry industries.

Senior Farmers Market Nutrition Program seeking participants

Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom is encouraging all senior citizens 60 and older, and meeting certain income requirements, to contact their parish Council on Aging to participate in the Seniors Farmers Market Nutrition Program.

All participants must be 60 years old and have a household income of $15,448 or less for an individual, and $20,813 or less for a two-person family unit. For each additional person, $5,365 is added to the household income limit.

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry secured a $500,000 grant from the USDA to participate in a nationwide pilot program allowing senior citizens to buy locally grown fresh fruits and vegetables at farmers markets and permanent roadside stands. Through the grant, those who qualify will receive a book of five $4 coupons, which can be used only to buy fruits and vegetables at certified stands and markets.

Louisiana has 15 farmers markets that will be participating in the program and 10 roadside stands have applied to date.

"Our goal is to start mailing the coupons May 1, and we will continue sending them until we have reached our limit of 25,000. It is imperative for those who believe they qualify to call their Council on Aging and ask to be placed on the list to receive coupons," Odom said.

Anyone who has already qualified for the program with the local Council on Aging need not do so again. Odom said some residents might be pre-qualified for the farmers market program because of other programs they participate in, such as Louisiana Purchase food stamps. Those who pre-qualify still need to request the farmers market coupons in order to participate.

"So far we have had excellent response from the Councils on Aging," Odom added, "but we know there are more people out there who qualify. We just need help locating them."

The department is also looking for farmers with permanent roadside stands who would like to be certified for participation in the program. Those interested in should call 225-922-1277.
